IOSH generates income from its activities to further the interests of our members and the occupational safety and health profession more widely. What this means is giving voice to the profession and extending its influence in creating workplaces that are healthier, safer and more sustainable.

We do this by setting and maintaining high professional standards, by commissioning research, by producing training materials, by advocacy and by campaigning on issues that affect millions of people.

Working with IOSH will connect you with a highly-focussed network of key decision-makers and budget-holders in the safety and health profession, enabling you to achieve your marketing objectives.
